

WHEN TO GIVE YOUR BLESSING

After observing scripture, you should realize why it is important to give your Blessing away to your teenager. But how do you give it away? When should you give it away? How often should you give it away?

When my first son was born, I started a practice at his birthday party of giving him a public blessing. I will admit it felt a little weird speaking a blessing over a little baby, but it was a rhythm that I was determined to get into. Every year both of my boys now understand, that just before they blow out the candles on their cake, I will offer a short blessing to them.

I would like to suggest that you give a similar Blessing to your 7th grader on or around their 13th birthday.

All families establish their own traditions, and it is those traditions that tell their story. It would be wise and strategic for you as a parent to make a Blessing Ceremony a huge part of that story.

Do What Fits You and Your Teenager

If you decide to do a Blessing Ceremony for your teenager, I want to spend some time setting you up for success. It is a big deal to put your heart out there for your teenager to see, so I want to make sure that it is a positive experience for you.

That is why before you do the Blessing Ceremony, you should probably talk to your teenager.

Teenagers typically don't like to be surprised publicly, so let them know what you are planning to do.

It is important that you tell them that they have no choice regarding whether or not they get your Blessing. But they do have a choice in how they receive it. You can offer them these three options.

- A Written Note of Blessing - Your teenager will receive from you a letter with a written Blessing from you as their parent. This will be for them alone to enjoy. Your teenager might be shy or extremely introverted, and this option may fit them perfectly.
- A Family Dinner - The family will come together for a special dinner. The favorite food of your teenager will be served. During the dinner you will give a public Blessing to your teenager and offer the family members a chance to do the same.
- A Public Blessing - Your teenager might be a party animal and an extrovert, and they may love the idea of you giving them a party for their Blessing Ceremony. This might be terrifying for you to speak publicly about anything, but remember it is more terrifying for your teenager to miss out on a Blessing. So channel as much strength as you can to rise to the occasion! Also, never fear, we will have some written Blessings for you to use to prepare. It is perfectly okay to read your Blessing. It works just the same.

HOW TO GIVE YOUR BLESSING

When you finally get up the courage to unleash your Blessing, so that you can unleash your teenager, what do you say?

Here are some things that you don't say:

"I love you because you scored 32 points in the game last night. I am proud of your success as an athlete, and I encourage you to score 33 points in the next game. Keep getting better."

Some of you may say, "What's wrong with that?" When you bless your teenager's performance, you are saying to them that they can have your approval as long as they do something.

The beauty of a Blessing exists because it is not about what you do but who you are. As the parent, there is no one else on the planet that truly knows the heart of your teenager more than you. The Blessing is a time for you to hold up a mirror to their soul and explain to them who they are, not just what they have done.

Here are some examples of Blessing your teenager's identity:

- I know you to be a kind person who takes care of those in need.
- I marvel at how patient you are. I want you to know that I see you are slow to become angry, and I admire that.
- One of the things I respect the most is a hard worker, and when I watch you, I see a very hard worker.
- You have a natural beauty that no make-up or outfit could ever enhance. You are truly beautiful.
- When you walk into a room, you light it up. You have been given the gift of charisma, where you shine from your soul for others to see.
- I appreciate how you think before you speak. You are a deep thinker, and that is going to serve you well in life.
- These kinds of statements cut to the heart of who your teenager really is, not what they can do. These kinds of statements are the bricks and mortar by which your teenager will build their self-image.
- I don't want you to be afraid to brag on their accomplishments, but if that is the extent of the Blessing, you might be sending the wrong message.

When you bless their identity rather than their performance, they won't need to earn your approval; they will already have it.

SHARE YOUR DREAM FOR THEM IN THE COMING YEAR

There is a fine line between controlling your teenager and guiding your teenager. Hidden within each Blessing is a golden opportunity to guide your teenager with love.

Take some time in the Blessing to share your dream for them in the coming year.

Here are some examples:

- My dream for you in the coming year is that you will continue to grow in your love for others, that you will find ways to serve those around you, and that you will use your ability to make others smile.
- My dream for you is that you will be a peacemaker. You have a calming presence about you that can be a great attribute to your friends that are in conflict.
- I am so excited to watch you throughout this next year as you take your hard work ethic and apply it to your life through school, sports, and other activities. There is no telling what will happen when you put such extraordinary effort into all you do. I am proud of you.
- My dream for you this year is that you will find ways to use your gift of leadership, which is so evident.

The key to this is to keep these “dreams” you are sharing very encouraging and general. Don’t bring up specific examples, but in general, give them practical ways they can live out the character traits you have highlighted. If you say, “My dream for you this year is that you will use your brains to actually pass Biology class for once,” you have brought a negative scenario into what is meant to be an uplifting moment. There will be plenty of opportunities to discuss the poor Biology grade, but the Blessing is not that time.

Make sure your tone is positive and your words are inspiring. You don’t guilt your student to change; you inspire them to change. A Blessing is an opportunity to inspire. It is an opportunity to help them believe something about themselves that they might have otherwise never noticed.

A Blessing is
to inspire.

GIVE AN EXAMPLE OF SOMEONE THEY REMIND YOU OF

Younger teenagers especially will receive your Blessing when you compare them to someone they admire. This is a concrete comparison that might make vivid the attribute you are trying to ascribe to them.

If you do this, you want to make sure this is a person that your student will know and admire. Don't just use someone as an example that you like, but make sure it is an inspirational figure to your teenager.

Here are some examples:

- You remind me of your grandfather. He was one of the kindest men I have ever met. I sometimes have to do a double-take when I see the way you treat people. It looks so much like the way he treated people.
- I am sure you have heard of Martin Luther King Jr. He was a man of peace. When the whole world wanted to respond to racism in violence, he taught a nation to respond with love. I see his spirit in you.
- Your natural beauty is something I have seen before in the face of your mother. She is beautiful inside and out, and you were given that same gift.
- In the Bible there is a man named Joshua. He was known to be a man of great courage. I often look at you and see that same kind of courage. You remind me of Joshua.

These comparisons can be so powerful in the life of your teenager. I have seen teenagers receive a Blessing like this, and the person they were compared to becomes a hero to them.

THE POWER OF USING SYMBOLS IN YOUR BLESSING

One great addition to your teenager's Blessing would be to include a symbol. This is another concrete way to get your point across to your teenager. Whatever character trait you are seeking to communicate can usually be represented by some sort of symbol. If you present that to your teenager during their Blessing, it will be something that they can hold onto for the rest of their lives.

Here is a great tip for giving your Blessing: Write down your Blessing and read it to your teenager. It will calm your nerves, and you can give it to them as a keepsake, so they can read your words over and over.

You can give your teenager a family heirloom, a gift, or an object that you attach meaning to. The point of the symbol would be for them to be able to hold it in their hands and remember the Blessing it represents. Using a symbol will help the words of your Blessing last.

RESIST THE TEMPTATION TO INSTRUCT

I can't say this enough. A Blessing is not a time to instruct your teenager on what you wish they would do better. Save that conversation for later, but for now put courage in your teenager through encouragement.

Resist taking a shot. Resist giving a to-do list of things to earn your approval. Resist withholding your Blessing due to a grudge.

You have heard it said, "If you don't have anything nice to say, don't say anything at all." Some very honest and vulnerable parents have confessed to me that there has been such rebellion and conflict that they don't have anything they can come up with for a Blessing.

The reality is, if you don't have anything nice to say to your teenager, it is most likely because you are experiencing parental fatigue. There are seasons of so much fighting and angst that your parenting batteries can be drained. This is nothing to feel guilty about, but it is something to take action on.

If this is you, my encouragement is to interview their friends, teachers, and other folks they interact with. They will give you another perspective of your teenager that will spur on things to share. It is great to quote other folks and what they have said about your teenager as part of the Blessing.
